CONVERSION AUDIT · 19 OCTOBER 2026

Clacky landing page: conversion audit

What clacky.app does right, what it does wrong, and what to fix first.

89	+1–2/day	15,000 px	$39/yr
Macs that tried Clacky on Oct 18 (55 trials + 34 paid)	recent growth, against a goal of 1,000,000 users in a year	desktop page length; about 22,000 px (~28 screens) on a phone	or $4.99/mo or $99 lifetime. The 7-day trial needs a card.

Clacky is a Mac app launched Sep 28 by Justinas Rolando: click sounds, a screen recorder, notch tools, a cozy town game, plus analytics and a post scheduler.

What I covered. Roughly 220 of Justinas's ~7,100 posts (the whole Clacky era from the Sep 25 teaser to today, plus top posts, but not the older history or replies); clacky.app at desktop and phone width, `/try/`, the changelog, and seenpaid.com. I didn't start a trial, check out or download anything. I can't see analytics, so these are judgments from the page and public numbers, not measured causes.

PART 1 What the page does right

01 One CTA, repeated, with a focused step behind it

- "Try free for 7 days" is identical in the nav, hero, pricing and closing block.
- `/try/` is a clean single-purpose page: one primary button, a 3-step "how it works", the real app UI and a sticky CTA bar.

02 The site is the demo

- Every click plays a sound, with a live click counter and a mascot, so people feel the product before installing.
- It travels: Justinas reported ~195K clicks from 1,800+ cities in the first week, and many quotes praise the website itself.

03 A trust strip right under the hero

- "Signed and notarized by Apple · Recordings stay on your Mac · Every feature on every plan · Works on 2 Macs · Built in public by one maker."
- A Mac app that wants input permissions needs this. The "Does Clacky read what I type?" FAQ answers the scariest objection directly.

04 Price anchoring against named competitors

- "One friendly app instead of six" lists CleanShot X, Screen Studio, Plausible, Buffer and others: $300.98/yr vs $39/yr, dated 14 Oct 2026, each linking to a `/vs/` page.
- It's specific and checkable, and it turns a $39 ask into a saving.

05 Clear pricing mechanics and risk reversal

- Yearly leads as "$3.25/mo", with Monthly ($4.99) and Lifetime ($99, 7-day refund) beside it. "Every feature on every plan" removes tier-hunting.
- "$0 today, cancel anytime in one click" is stated plainly on `/try/`, and the pricing block repeats "cancel anytime in one click."

06 Social proof that is real and honest

- 33 quotes, most linked to the original X post, labelled "3 of them from people who bought."
- The candour suits a build-in-public brand, and the "house" layout makes the quotes feel part of the product.

07 Distinct identity and solid basics

- A painted harbour-town world instead of a SaaS template, no cookie banner, and about 1.2 s load in my browser.
- One H1, canonical, OG/Twitter cards, JSON-LD and 14 languages. India was Justinas's top click country, and Hindi, Bengali and Tamil exist.

PART 2 What the page does wrong (highest impact first)

01 Positioning says "everything", so it says nothing

- The H1 is "The cozy Mac app for everything you make". The subhead lists sounds, a recorder, 20+ tools, analytics and a harbour town. The FAQ needs ~60 words to answer "What is Clacky?"
- Title tag, OG title and H1 are three different pitches. The original promise ("satisfying click sounds, $4.99 once") is buried. A Reddit reply to the 2.7 post said "stop wasting your tokens."
- FIX One buyer and one job in the hero. seenpaid.com's "Let your AI agent run your socials" is the standard to match.

02 No product in the hero, and on phones no explanation at all

- Desktop shows an illustration only; the first real UI is about two screens down. On a phone the subhead is `display:none`, so the hero is just the headline and a button.
- A short looping demo or product shot above the fold is the highest-leverage fix for an audio-visual product.

03 The card requirement isn't disclosed where the click happens

- The CTA and its microcopy say "7 days free · cancel anytime". Only `/try/` ("Start at checkout with a card: $0 today") and FAQ #8 of 12 mention the card. Justinas's posts on Oct 3 and Oct 10 still said "no card, no email."
- There is no card-free way to try the app, and the only low-commitment capture is a footer "Notify me" box. Trial starts fell from ~20 on Oct 4 to a trickle (55 trials in total by Oct 18, up from 53 on Oct 14). Much of that is launch decay, but a card wall won't help.

04 The pricing card sells a different product than the one visitors came for

- The first thing priced is a website-pageviews slider ($39 → $119 → $199/yr) with "10 websites, 10 social accounts, 300 scheduled posts". That half overlaps seenpaid.com, Justinas's other product.
- The ask rose from $4.99 once to $39/yr or $99 lifetime (about 8–20×), but the proof didn't change. One quote still praises "the pricing model."

05 Social proof proves "fun", not "worth $39 a year"

- Nearly all quotes are about the sounds, the website or the launch video. Three mention the click ripple in recordings; none mentions the editor, analytics or scheduling. By the page's own count, only 3 of the 33 come from buyers.
- The stats strip pairs "532,613 clicks" (website play) with "89 Macs that tried Clacky", which shows cold visitors how small the user base is. There are no ratings, press or demo video.

06 Too long, too many exits, and off-goal blocks in the path

- The page is 15,000 px on desktop and about 22,000 px (~28 screens) on a phone. It has 46 feature bullets, 12 free-tool links and ~45 footer links, and most quotes link out to X.
- The Creators Program, the Ads Program and two "Concept · not live yet" mock-ups sit between pricing and FAQ. They serve other audiences and signal unfinished work.

07 Phones can't convert quickly

- The phone header has no menu and no CTA, nothing is sticky, and the Boop button floats over the pricing button at 390 px. After the hero, the next CTA is ~15 screens down.
- It's Mac-only but likely reached mostly from phones via X, and there's no "email me the link / send to my Mac" option.

08 Dead links and unfulfilled promises

- `#faq-windows`, `#playground` and `#faq` don't exist. The Windows/Linux waitlist link Justinas promoted on X on Oct 1 lands at the top of the page with no form. It's worth checking whether that FAQ only renders for non-Mac browsers.
- The nav counter says "See them on the map" but nothing opens, and its global total showed "–" in my session.

09 Persuasion is ordered backwards

- Pricing (55% down) appears before the “six apps = $300.98” anchor. Deciding facts (card up front, macOS 13/14/15 requirements) sit in FAQ items 8–10 at 82% down.
- Move the comparison above pricing, and put “macOS 13+ · card, $0 today” beside the CTA.

10 X doesn’t pre-sell the page, and the traffic isn’t the buyer

- The bio is two bare links plus “lets talk & make clacky great”, and the pinned post is the 1M-user goal, not a product pitch. Reach comes from memes and stunts (109K views for the “token loan” post, 85K for the “$5K offer”), while product posts get 3–4K.
- Visitors are likely builders following Justinas, arriving at a page that sells a many-job suite.

If I had to pick three

1. Give the hero one job, with the product visible.
2. Say “card, $0 today” next to the CTA, or bring back a no-card trial.
3. Split sounds and recorder from the analytics/scheduler, so the pricing card sells what visitors came for.

Sources: clacky.app (home page, `/try/`, FAQ, changelog), seenpaid.com, and x.com/JustinasRoland0 including search results, all read on 19 Oct 2026. Prices, copy and counters on the live page change often; re-check before acting.